1. OSDH has deployed mobile wellness units statewide: Mobile Wellness Units – purchased with COVID relief funding – are being delivered to all nine of Oklahoma’s Public Health Districts. Each mobile unit consists of a fifth wheel travel trailer pulled by an extended cab dually RAM pickup truck, and two vans.

The trailers are equipped to facilitate full clinic services for women’s exams, well-checks, and other public health programs. There is a built-in reception area, generator, satellite dish and wheelchair lift among other features. The vans are designed for less invasive medical visits and to facilitate other public health programs.

Mobile units have proven to be an effective method of reaching people where they live, work, and play,” Assistant Deputy Commissioner Mendy Spohn said. “Deployment of these mobile units allow public health services to be provided in a wide variety of settings, including neighborhoods, community events and festivals.

Great idea for HOSA OSDH is also seeking partnerships with other health care organizations to better provide health services to underserved populations. The mobile units will remain with each district and can be deployed across the state as needed.
